Lorelle VanFossen Co-Founder, Educators in VR

Lorelle VanFossen co-founded Educators in VR with Daniel Dyboski-Bryant in 2018, bringing together educators, learners, researchers, and passionate enthusiasts from around the world working together to integrate immersive technology into education. In the past year, they've produced over 300 events in VR, hosting classes, trainings, workshops, and meetups in AltspaceVR, ENGAGE, and other VR platforms. They produced the 2020 Educators in VR International Summit over six 24-hr days all in virtual reality across six platforms for more than 6,000 event attendees, Students in VR conference in May, 2020 iLRN Conference for the Immersive Learning Research Network in June, and 2-day student led take-over of the United Nations this fall.

Educators in VR offers consulting, production, and extensive training programs for educational and business VR events on multiple platforms. They are partners with iLRN and the Virtual World Society, working together to evangelize the XR technologies in education.

Lorelle is an educator, keynote, trainer, and consultant in web publishing and digital storytelling. She was one of the founding members of the WordPress Community, developing the first educational training and academic programs for the world's most popular web publishing system. She published one of the first books on blogging and social media, and published over 15,000 articles on the subject. As producer and curriculum developer for Educators in VR, Lorelle's developed over a dozen training workshops on VR events and basics of VR in education, virtual world building, and VR citizenship and etiquette. She teaches an average of 20 hours a week in VR, including the hardest subject to present in VR: writing.
